- Actions to Stop Doing: The team should also stop placing the task work on a low priority, as not much effort is put into completing it. The team should also stop using magic numbers, as it prevents others from understanding portions of their code.
- Actions to Start Doing: The team should start explaining their process/problems clearly and explicitly to fellow members, since this will keep them up-to-date and be able to address issues more clearly. We should also start documenting our code as we go, so that fellow members can understand the basic functionality and reason behind the code.
- Actions to Keep Doing: The team should continue attempting to complete 1-2 tasks by each Scrum meeting, as it keeps us fairly on track. We should also keep having meetings outside the daily scrum to help members who fall behind catch up.
- Work Completed
 - All tasks from user stories 1 and 3 have been completed. Almost all tasks from user story 2 are finished, except for one.
- Work Not Completed
 - Task 4 from user story 2 has not yet been completed, and will now be pushed onto Sprint 4.
- Work Completion Rate

- All 3 user stories were more or less completed, save that one task. 10/11 tasks were completed, for a completion rate of 91%. Ideally, we wanted complete somewhere between 60-80 work hours over the two weeks.
